A good tractor can last for generations if you take care of it. You don't have to spend a fortune to find a good tractor; in fact, you can buy a good used tractor for a fraction of what you would pay for a new one. There are several places to look for reliable used equipment. Here are some of the best places to find reliable used tractors for sale. Local Sources The first place you may want to consider in your used tractor search are local sources. Check out classified ads in your local newspaper or news website. You may find exactly what you want nearby without having to drive too far. Keep your ear to the ground for other local sellers who may have what you need. Or you can simply drive around and look for local sellers, especially if you live in a rural area with lots of farmland. Never underestimate the power of looking around locally, because you can find good deals that aren't too far away from you. Tractor Dealerships Many tractor dealerships offer used equipment for sale, and chances are you can find one not too far from where you live. Dealerships often offer the best prices on used tractors, and you can even get financing through them. When it comes to used equipment you can usually purchase one with a warranty, and the selection at a dealership is much better than you can find from an individual seller. Most manufacturers establish relationships with dealers, and you can often buy tractors with the blessing or endorsement of the manufacturer. Often a dealership is one of the best places to find a used tractor. Equipment Sales Websites There are plenty of online options for finding used tractors. Used equipment websites abound, and you can most likely find a tractor near you by searching on one of those. Websites that offer tractors for sale feature equipment from all over the country from both individuals and dealerships. You can search by state or location, and you can drill down by brand, price point or any other factors you can think of to find what you're looking for. Many of the websites offer financing, either independently or via the seller, and you can turn any particular site into your own one-stop shop for a used tractor. Live Auctions You can find used tractors at live auctions, and there's most likely an auction not too far from where you live. Some auctions are associated with estate sales or foreclosures, while other auctions specialize in equipment from multiple sellers. Be patient, because you may be at an auction for a while before you find something that suits your needs or is in your price point, but when you see what you want, be ready to bid because they can often move quickly. More often than not, you need cash in hand to be able to make a purchase at an auction, but you can find good deals on quality used tractors. eBay Just like nearly every other item in the world, you can find tractors for sale on eBay. With eBay you can search by brand or price range to find what you're looking for. Some tractors are for sale at a fixed price, often with the option for you to make a counteroffer, while others are available for bidding. Occasionally, you can find a good deal by bidding on an auction and pay less than you planned for a quality tractor. The eBay website even offers financing if you need it. Be aware that you may have to pay to have the tractor delivered or arrange pickup yourself. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET While buying a brand new tractor would be nice, your situation may call for a less expensive, used small farm tractor. Unlike used cars, tractors can provide several decades of good service, possibly even longer. So buying a 25-year-old car may not be a great idea, but buying a 25-year old tractor for your farm could be a sweet deal. Older tractors tend to be more affordable while still having plenty of years of service left in them. So how should you go about buying a used tractor? Starting Your Search These days, you don't have to jump in your truck and start driving to farms to find used tractors for sale. Searching online for used farm tractors is a better way to start. Look for options that fit both your budget and needs. For instance, a compact utility tractor is ideal for landscaping and nursery jobs, while slightly bigger tractors are great for handling livestock work, digging ditches and baling hay. Make a list of tractors that catch your attention, and ask your network of family, friends and acquaintances for recommendations. Dig for More Information Once you narrow your choices, try to gather as much information as possible about the seller and the tractor. Look for reviews about that model and eliminate tractors with bad reputations from your list. Sellers may include private owners, dealerships and auction houses, and purchasing from each type of seller has its own pros and cons. You can probably get the best price from a private seller, but your purchase won't come with a warranty. Dealerships have a large inventory, and units may come with warranties, but the tractors typically cost more. Auction houses sometimes have a large inventory and bargain prices, but the tractors are probably sold as-is with no warranties. Carefully consider your options and proceed with the best offer for your circumstances. Time Your Search If possible, plan your purchase for a time when tractor prices are at more affordable. Tractor brands and dealerships usually conduct sales and trade-in activities from March to June. End of season sales are also a good time to search for good deals. Inspect the Tractor Thoroughly Take in the overall appearance of the tractor from the body to the engine, the wiring to the articulation points, all the way down to the tires. If a tractor looks well maintained, it probably is. Dents, peeling paint, cracks and bulging on tires are red flags, as these are signs the tractor was kept outside at the mercy of the elements. Take a closer look at the paint to see if it was recently applied to hide wear or rust. Lift up the hood to check the engine. Look for leaks in the hoses or hydraulics as well as gas, oil and water leaks that can signal engine issues. Take the tractor for a spin to see how it steers and handles as well as how the brakes and hydraulics perform. If you're satisfied with your inspection of the tractor, then you're ready to proceed with the purchase. Closing the Deal Before completing your purchase, try to get the best deal possible, whether you're negotiating with a private seller or a dealership. It wouldn't hurt to ask for guarantees or financing if you need it. Don't forget to ask if transport is available from the farm or dealership to your location. After you agree to the terms of the sale, pay up and enjoy your new (used) tractor.
